Extent: 1 photograph

Language and Scripts: The collection is in English.

Name of creator(s): Unknown

Administrative/Biographical History:

Mary and Helen McDannel were born to John Casey McDannel and Mary McDannel in Anchorage on December 4, 1917, the first recorded set of twins born in the town. John Casey had come to Anchorage in 1915 and was employed by the Alaska Engineering Commission in food service. He held the concession for dining and sleeping cars, including the "Seward," which traveled between Anchorage and Seward. His travels to Seward acquainted him with Jack Stotko, owner of several bars in Seward. Stotko had been one of the founders of Seward, settling there in 1903.

When Stotko and his wife Lavonia gave birth to Seward's first set of twins, Jack and Bill, shortly after McDannel's twins were born, McDannel reportedly threw a party for the children (see Barry, Mary J. Seward, Alaska: a history of the gateway city. Anchorage, AK: Barry, 1986-1995). That party may have been the occasion for the portrait photograph.

According to Rosemarie Levine in her paper "Hope: a history of the town and the surrounding area" (1969), the Mathison family had arrived in Hope in 1899 and built the first school in 1902. They owned the Mathison Mining & Mercantile and a sawmill, and operated a ferry service between Anchorage and places along the Turnagain Arm of Cook Inlet. Levine does not mention the birth of the Mathisons' twins or their names. Presumably, news of the twins' birth traveled quickly up and down the Inlet as the Mathisons made trips back and forth.
