TITLE: Fred B. Wood Collection

COLLECTION NUMBER: B1965.003

OVERVIEW OF THE COLLECTION

Dates: circa 1911-1956

Extent: 1.8 linear feet

Language and Scripts: The collection is in English.

Name of creator(s): Fred B. Wood, Alaskan Engineering Commission, Phinney S. Hunt, F. W. Sheelor, Jenner, J. McCain, Sydney Laurence Co., H.G. Kaiser, Chancey F. Peterson, Maude Dempsey, Sylvia Sexton, John E. Thwaites, Alfred S. Witter, Herbert Tozier

Administrative/Biographical History:

By 1911, when the Alaska Northern Railway folded, it had become clear to many that a railroad line from the coast to the interior of Alaska could not be built without federal involvement. Studies over several years looked at the viability of various port towns as termini, including Valdez, Cordova, Katalla, Portage Bay, and Seward. Sewardites were hopeful that the town would be chosen as the headquarters of the Alaska Railroad, and as planning progressed, the town experienced a boom in real estate development. In March 1914, shortly after President Woodrow Wilson signed the Alaska Railroad bill, the real estate firm of Romig & Romig was established.¹ In June 1914, when the Alaska Engineering Commission arrived in Seward to begin its work, the Fred Laubner homestead was purchased for $30,000 and platted as the Laubner Addition by Robert Ashland. Shortly afterward, Joseph E. Johnson purchased the northern half of the Edmund Rudolph homestead, and platted it as the Bay View

Addition.² Promotional material for the lots reflected the residents' hopes: "The prospects of Seward being the Ocean Terminal is pretty good proof that right now is the time to get a good lot in Bay View Addition." In April 1915, Seward was formally chosen as a terminus for the Alaska Railroad, and the town boomed. By July, however, the editor of The Seward Gateway was complaining about "favoritism" in the Alaska Railroad's development of a town site on Ship Creek called Anchorage; on November 17, the A.E.C. announced the relocation of the railroad headquarters from Seward to Anchorage.³

Fred B. Wood came to Seward sometime prior to 1915 and joined J. H. Romig's real estate business. He also apparently ran a morgue there. He operated Wood Undertaking Company in Anchorage from 1915-1917 and 1919-1920; in 1918, he appears in Latouche, Alaska, with the Kennecott Copper Corporation. Wood's wife served as assistant postmaster in Seward; she left her position in 1920 to join her husband in California.⁴ The Woods apparently lived in California for the rest of their lives.

Scope and Content Description:

The collection consists of photographs, deeds, correspondence, maps, ephemera, and a ledger of funeral records created and/or collected by Fred B. Wood. The materials primarily pertain to the history of Seward and Anchorage, Alaska, during the early development of the Alaska Railroad, 1915-1920. Also included are some tourist brochures from the 1930s-1950s. The images in a small photograph album are not of Alaska and are possibly of Montana scenes, including a visit by Theodore Roosevelt.

Arrangement: Arranged by format, then by subject and further chronologically. 1. Photographs. 2. Manuscript materials. 3. Publications. 4. Funeral ledger.
